

Bianca Batlle-Nguema

CV

Bianca's mother was sent from Equatorial Guinea to Spain in 1967, at the age of twelve, to study in Europe. Her name was Marina and she was a full citizen, since at that time Equatorial Guinea was a Spanish colony. Even so, Marina underwent that experience in a traumatic way: on the one hand, her estrangement from her home and family brought deep feelings of abandonment, uprooting and loneliness which she never really managed to get rid of. On the other, the prejudices of the white Spanish population about black people prevented her from feeling accepted, and she could never develop a true sense of belonging. She settled in Barcelona first and in Andorra later, and due to various circumstances she never returned to Africa. Over the years, she met a man from Barcelona with whom she had her daughter Bianca, and although Marina had a formidable story to tell, for her own reasons she never talked to anyone about her roots or about her youth away from Guinea; neither with her daughter.

In 2010, after Marina's death, Bianca embarked on a journey through art to discover her roots. Being a mixed-race woman is an essential part of her own discovery and search for her identity. For her, this is an incredible journey that continues to this day.
